PREFACE.

This book was originally compiled as a card index of our graduates. But it seemed fitting that a more complete record should be made and it was decided to publish our data in book form.

Circulars were sent to every graduate whose address was known. Asking for the full name, when and where born, where educated, date of matriculation, and graduation, places at which located, present location, college and hospital appointments, marriage, when and to whom, and army record.

A very gratifying number of these circulars were returned with the desired information. Where no answer was obtained a second letter was sent. Then blanks for subscriptions were sent out with the result that some 230 subscriptions were obtained.

In all about 3,000 letters have been sent out. The gentlemen who have not taken enough interest to fill out the blank sent them will find their record incomplete. Most of our alumni have evidenced a different spirit.

It was intended at first to publish a large edition, but the small number of subscriptions forbade this and in the present unsettled and trying times through which all colleges are passing it was impossible for the college authorities to assume this publication.

It is due to the fact that Dr. Ralph Bernstein, Secretary of the College Faculty, consented to attend to the business management, and suggested that only a small edition should be published, that this book is now in print.

That there are errors and that many records are incomplete is evident, but it is due to the fact that after considerable search no facts could be found concerning some of our graduates.

It is right that we should have such a record. That our men should be able to keep in touch with their classmates. Of many of the older classes there are no members living. The later classes, arranged by the year of graduation, to be found in this book, will enable an alumnus to readily reach the surviving members of his class.

The compiler will be very thankful for any facts concerning such names as have not a complete record.

Thanks are due to Mr. Wallace K. Kratz, secretary to the Dean and clerk of the College for much careful clerical work, and with much useful information regarding the whereabouts of the graduates.

I wish to express my pleasure for the many words of cheer sent with the returned circulars.

These circulars have been bound into three large volumes and placed in the College library for future reference.

Great care has been taken in reading proof to refer to these original records where there was any doubt as to a name or date.

In the hope that it may be the means of bringing us, the alumni of the oldest homœopathic medical College in the world, into closer bond of fellowship this book is dedicated to the living and to the memory of those who have gone.

History

Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital of Philadelphia.

This institution, originally chartered as the Homœopathic Medical College of Pennsylvania, is the oldest devoted to homœopathy in the world. It was founded in 1848. At this time there was no institution where homœopathy was taught. Its practitioners were converts from the ranks of the dominant medical profession, and any medical student who wished to practice this system was compelled to graduate from an established college, supplementing this by a course of study under a homœopathic practitioner.

Previous to this Dr. Constantine Hering, with a number of colleagues, had, in 1835, established a school for homœopathy at Allentown, Pa. This was regularly chartered June 17, 1836, under the name of The North American Academy of the Homœopathic Healing Art, and was entitled to confer the degree of Doctor of Homœopathia upon its graduates. The instruction was in German. This school was closed after a few sessions.

In 1845, homœopathy had practitioners in twenty-two States, about 250 in number. In 1844, a national organization was effected, the American Institute of Homœopathy. In 1846, the American Medical Association was organized, and at a meeting held in May, 1847, resolutions were passed tending to prevent the extension of the new doctrine of homœopathy in the United States, it being resolved that the certificate of an irregular practitioner should not be received by the medical schools. This was reiterated at other meetings of the Association. Of course, to the average medical practitioner of that day the follower of and believer in the doctrines promulgated by Hahnemann was decidedly "irregular," and the medical student, if known to have any intention to practice homœopathy, was not received by the colleges, or, if received, was not allowed to graduate. Hence it became of paramount necessity for the future welfare of the homœopathic system that its members establish a medical school where its tenets should be taught and its students legally graduated. The matter was discussed by the profession at large, and especially by the homœopathic physicians of Philadelphia, then a center for homœopathic practitioners. One evening in February, 1848, Drs. Constantine Hering, Walter Williamson and Jacob Jeanes met at the house of the latter, and it was decided that a college for the teaching of homœopathy be established. The Legislature was then in session and a petition signed by eighteen physicians and many laymen was two days afterwards presented to that body, asking for a charter. This was successful, and the Act incorporating The Homœopathic Medical College of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, was passed April 5th, and signed by the Governor, April 8th, 1848.

The first meeting of its incorporators was held on Hahnemann's birthday, April 10, 1848, in the Athenæum Building, on the southeast corner of Sixth and Adelphi Streets, opposite Washington Square. With the exception of one meeting, held at the Assembly Buildings, Tenth and Chestnut Streets, all the meetings of the College authorities were held at the Athenæum. At a meeting held on September 16th, the Committee on Buildings reported that arrangements had been made for renting rooms at No. 229 Arch Street for the use of dispensary and college.

The first announcement was only a circular, upon which the following was printed:

"HOMŒOPATHIC MEDICAL COLLEGE OF PENNSYLVANIA,
"College Building, located in the rear of 229 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"Preliminary Instructions will commence on Monday, the sixteenth day of October, 1848.

"The Regular Course will begin on Monday, the sixth day of November, and continue until the first of March ensuing.

"Jacob Jeanes, M. D., Professor of Principles and Practice of Medicine; Caleb B. Matthews, M. D., Professor of Materia Medica; Walter Williamson, M. D., Professor of Midwifery and Diseases of Women and Children; Francis Sims, M. D., Professor of Surgery; Samuel Freedley, M. D., Professor of Botany; Matthew Semple, M. D., Professor of Chemistry; William A. Gardiner, M. D., Professor of Anatomy. The chairs of Physiology and Pathology remain to be filled.

"Clinical Instruction in Medicine and Surgery will be given at the College.

"Lectures will be delivered throughout the year, but the winter course only will be obligatory—attendance on the summer course being at the option of the student.

"Standard works on Homœopathy and such books as are generally used in other medical schools can be used as text-books.

"Students who have attended a full course of lectures in another medical school can, after attending the winter course of this College, graduate next spring, if their attainments justify it.

"Fee for full Course, $100; Practical Anatomy, $10; Graduation Fee, $30.

"W. Williamson, M. D., Dean of the Faculty.

"No. 80 North 11th Street, Philadelphia."

Dr. A. E. Small was subsequently appointed to the chair of Physiology. The rooms at 229, now 635, Arch Street, had previously been used for a school and for a meeting room for the Swedenborgian Church. The front of this building was for many years used for a homœopathic pharmacy by Messrs. Sheek and Rhadermacher and, later, by Dr. F. E. Boericke.

The college opened at the advertised time with fifteen students: John G. Shultz, Henry F. Davis, D. R. Luyties, Frederic Humphreys, Samuel O. Scudder, Nathan S. Engle, Joseph K. Clark, J. Loxley Rhees, E. Bently Hall, M. D., John L. Jahvens, Daniel R. Gardiner, Frederick Sheek, J. H. P. Frost, Thomas S. Rodman, M. D., Charles G. Raue.

The first public commencement was held on Thursday, March 29, 1849, and the degree of the College was conferred by the President, the Hon. A. V. Parsons, upon Joseph K. Clark, of Massachusetts; Henry F. Davis, of Ohio; Nathan S. Engle, of New Jersey; Daniel E. Gardiner, of Pa.; E. Bentley Hall, N. J.; Samuel O. Scudder, of New York.

But one course of lectures was given in the building on Arch Street: the accommodations were inadequate and a building that had been occupied by the Pennsylvania Medical College was rented. This building, originally built for Mr. Matthew Newkirk for the Philadelphia Institute for the Instruction of Young Men, and which had also been used for a church, was situated on the north side of Filbert Street, between Eleventh and Twelfth Streets, being No. 1105 Filbert Street.

The announcement for the second session was an octavo pamphlet of sixteen pages. The officers of the College consisted of a Board of Managers, the President and twelve elected from the 106 corporators. The faculty elected its own officers. The term began in October and ended in March. The second session began in the new College, October 1, 1849, and ended March 2, 1850. There were fifty-five matriculates, of whom twenty graduated. The demands for medical education were much less than at the present day. The requirements for graduation at the University of Pennsylvania in 1852 were: "Candidate must be twenty-one years old; have studied medicine for three years: during two years have been the private pupil of a respectable practitioner of medicine: two full courses of lectures in that institution: a course of clinical instruction at the Pennsylvania Hospital or some other approved institution. Also to present a thesis." The rules at Jefferson and at Harvard were the same. The Homœopathic College rules, as presented in the second announcement, were: "Candidate for graduation must be of good moral character: be possessed of sufficient preliminary education: have attained the age of twenty-one: have applied himself to the study of medicine for three years: attended two courses of medical lectures, the last of which must have been in this institution: and have been the private pupil of a respectable practitioner of medicine." The standard of medical education was the same as that required by other medical colleges.

The Homœopathic College was now an established fact, and continued to hold yearly sessions. There were the usual vicissitudes and changes of college life. In 1855, the College building previously rented from Mr. Newkirk was bought by the College corporation, with two buildings in the rear, a mortgage being given in part payment. From this time the College labored under debt, and, in 1864, in order that affairs should be put upon a sound financial basis, a new charter was obtained; the corporation having a capital stock of $60,000, divided into 3,000 shares of $20 each; the College to have the power to grant the degree not only of medicine, but of doctor of homœopathic medicine.

On these shares money could be borrowed. At this time, in 1865, it was thought advisable to publish a medical magazine in the College interests. A college journal, The Philadelphia Journal of Homœopathy, had been issued monthly from 1852 to 1856, when it was discontinued. In August, 1865, the first number of the new journal, The Hahnemannian Monthly, was issued. This has been published under several managements ever since, and is now considered one of the standard journals of the Homœopathic School.

During the session of 1866-67 there was some difference of opinion among the members of the faculty of the College and, at the close of the session, several of them severed their connection with the institution. During the summer a new college was organized by these gentlemen. The charter of the old Eclectic College was secured and its name changed by the Courts to The Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia. It was organized with a Board of Corporation Trustees, a Medical Faculty, or Board of Professional Trustees, and a Board of Curators. The second and third stories of the building at 1307 Chestnut Street were rented, and a preliminary course was opened there on September 30, 1867, the regular course commencing October 13th. But one course was held in this building. During the summer of 1868 the College was removed to Nos. 16-18 North Tenth Street, where the session of 1868-69 was held. In the meantime the old College held sessions in the building on Filbert Street, and there was considerable rivalry between the two institutions.

In the summer of 1869 it became evident that for the well-being of both schools, and of the cause, they should be united. The Legislature was petitioned, and in April, 1869, an Act was passed consolidating the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia and the Homœopathic Medical College of Pennsylvania into one corporation. This was done, and to the regret of some of the older graduates the old name was done away with and the name of the new corporation became: The Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia. A new faculty was organized from the two faculties and possession was taken of the old College building on Filbert Street.

With this new departure, in the announcement for 1869-70, mention is made of the need of a course of lectures to extend over three collegiate years. This was advisable, but left optional with the student. This optional three years' course originated with the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia, and thus we find this institution the pioneer in the advancement of the requirements for a medical education. Preliminary courses of lectures were also inaugurated.

During the next ten years the College sessions were held regularly in the old College. The commencements were held in the Academy of Music, and from fifty to eighty students were graduated yearly. For some time the College building had been inadequate for the increasing demands of the curriculum and, in 1882, efforts were made to secure a situation for the erection of college and hospital buildings. A plot of ground was selected on Broad Street, between Race and Vine Streets and extending from Broad to Fifteenth Street. This included the numbers from 221 to 233 North Broad Street, and extended to and also included the Fifteenth Street frontage, the entire lot embracing one and one-eighth acres.

On November 6, 1884, the corner-stone of the new College was laid with Masonic ceremonies (at the northeast angle of the foundation on a level with the basement window). The building was completed in 1886.

The last course in the Filbert Street college ended in the spring of 1886. The new college was completed, and from September 20th to 25th, in place of the usual preliminary lectures, there was held at the new college a dedication week. This included the dedication of the new building, its inspection by physicians, a general reception, and the twenty-second session of the Homœopathic Medical Society of Pennsylvania. The dedication was held upon the evening of September 21st. The lectures opened on September 27th with 173 matriculates. With this session the three years' course was rendered obligatory. Previous to this there had been but little division of classes, but now the curriculum for the men of different years became independent with each class for each year, although as yet the students were only known as first, second and third-year students. The examinations of each of the classes were also different.

The old college was sold to a hotel company, was remodeled and afterwards became the Hotel Hilton. The great terminal depot of the Reading Railroad now covers the ground where the old college stood.

The teaching corps, which originally consisted of but seven professors, now embraced chairs of Anatomy, Obstetrics and Puerperal Diseases, and Diseases of Infants; Gynæcology and Pædology; Physiology and Sanitary Science; Operative and Clinical Surgery, and Ophthalmology; Principles of Surgery and Clinical Surgery; Materia Medica and Therapeutics; Pathology and Practice of Medicine; Natural Philosophy; General and Medical Chemistry; Adjunct Professor of Obstetrics; with also Lectures on Surgical Anatomy; on Pharmacy and Toxicology; Microscopy and Histology; History and Institutes of Medicine; Ophthalmology, Laryngology and Otology; Medical Jurisprudence; General Pathology and Morbid Anatomy; Medical Dentistry; Physiological Medicine; Demonstrators of Surgery, Obstetrics, Chemistry and Anatomy.

This curriculum was the equal of that of any other medical school. In 1890 the College authorities offered a plan for a four years' graded course. This had been recommended by the Inter-collegiate Committee of the American Institute of Homœopathy, and with the sessions of 1894-95 this four years' course became obligatory. The classes were now divided into Freshmen, Sophomores, Juniors and Seniors, and each class attended its special lectures. The corps of professors, lecturers and clinical instructors was greatly increased. A preliminary examination was also demanded.

A notable event in the History of the College occurred in 1898, when the institution celebrated its golden jubilee. It occurred at the time of graduation, May 11 and 12, 1898. There was a large gathering of the Alumni from many States, together with other physicians of the Homœopathic School. The first day was devoted to addresses and conferences upon subjects relating to medical education, and on Thursday, May 12, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the commencement was held in the Academy of Music, and immediately afterwards a golden jubilee reunion and meeting of the Alumni Association was held in Horticultural Hall, followed in the evening by a banquet in the same place.

For the last twenty years the didactic and clinical advantages of this medical school have been constantly increasing until the present time. The number of teachers has been greatly increased. There are now professorships as follows: Emeritus Professor of Medicine; Emeritus of Ophthalmology and Otology; Professor of Gynæcology; Surgery; Anatomy; Chemistry and Toxicology; Materia Medica and Therapeutics; Physiology; Practice of Medicine; Medical Diagnosis and Clinical Medicine; Regional and Applied Anatomy; Pathology; Obstetrics; Physiological Materia Medica and Drug Mechanics; Neurology; Dermatology; Ophthalmology; Laryngology and Rhinology; Genito-Urinary Diseases; Associate of Surgery; Associate of Gynæcology; Associate of Clinical Medicine; Pædiatrics; Neuro-Histology and Mental Diseases; Clinical of Pædiatrics; Emergencies; Pharmacodynamics and Pharmaceutics; Otology; Anæsthetics; Associate of Clinical Medicine; Lectures on Medical Terminology; Embryology and Demonstrator of Physiology; Materia Medica and Institutes; Histology; Electro- and Hydrotherapy. There are also thirty-eight instructors and demonstrators of the various branches taught. Not only are didactic lectures given, but the students are required to do practical laboratory and clinical work in the various branches of medical science, the large hospital and dispensary attached to the College rendering this possible.

Almost from the first days of the institution it became the aim to establish a museum. The first entry regarding specimens is in 1850. In 1851 the museum already contained wax models, anatomical preparations and many anatomical and obstetrical plates, a cabinet of minerals, botanical specimens, philosophical instruments. During the summer of 1869 the summary of the collection was: thirteen human skeletons; 15 skeletons of inferior animals; 204 dried arterial, nervous, venous preparations; 68 French elastic anatomical preparations; 12 models in wood; 23 papier maché pathological models; 124 wax anatomical preparations; 547 osteological specimens; 128 specimens of comparative anatomy; 237 pathological and anatomical specimens in glass jars; 428 materia medica specimens; 1,000 mineralogical specimens; 600 dried plants. Since that time much has been added. Of recent years it has been the aim to do away with useless specimens and make the museum an adjunct to teaching. There is not a branch taught that cannot be aptly illustrated by means of specimens from the museum, in most cases actual wet or dry anatomical preparations. These marvelous anatomical preparations are the work of Dr. R. B. Weaver, long the curator. At the World's Fair, at Chicago, were exhibited various dissections of the human body, including eight dissections of the eye, showing the retina and optic nerve, and that unique specimen, the cerebro-spinal nervous system of a human body, the only one in existence. This received a medal. There is also a series of preparations of the brain to illustrate the topographical surgery of that organ. This museum is open daily.

The library was really commenced about 1866. It has been gradually enriched by donations of books, until, at the present time, it contains about 18,000 volumes and some 400 volumes of bound pamphlets. It contains nearly all the literature of homœopathy, and also files of the standard medical journals and books of other systems. The anatomical library of Dr. A. R. Thomas, rich in old folios and rare tomes, fills a large glass case; Dr. Hering's collection of books by and about Paracelsus fills another case, and is probably the most complete collection extant. The library contains a set of Hahnemann's writings in the original German, many being annotated and enriched volumes. It has a complete card catalogue. It is at present also used as a reading and study room for the students.

With its clinical facilities, its well equipped hospital and dispensary, and its strict educational requirements, Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital takes rank to-day with the best institutions of the land.

Since the opening of the College, in 1848, the total number of graduates is 2,936.

THE HOSPITAL.

The first hospital in the United States devoted to homœopathy, and, no doubt, having connection with the newly organized homœopathic college, was opened in 1852. Its charter was obtained April 20, 1850. A large four-story building on the south-east corner of Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Streets was rented, fitted up and opened with a capacity of from thirty to forty beds. This building is still standing, although, as the street has been raised, the building is much lower than in the old days. It had formerly been a hotel. In the fall of 1853 a fair was held in the Chinese Museum, at Ninth and Sansom Streets, for its benefit, at which $2,800 was raised. The hospital was continued but two years, and the money in the treasury, with the furniture and appliances, was afterwards given to the Soldiers' Homœopathic Hospital.

Dr. Hering tells us that Dr. Geo. Bute, his first student, who preceded him in coming to Philadelphia, had a cholera hospital in Cherry Street in 1832. Although Dr. William Channing made experiments in New York in the cholera epidemic of 1832. Dr. Bute's hospital is probably the first hospital in the United States using homœopathic treatment, the Chestnut Street hospital being the second. The next homœopathic hospital was that for sick and wounded soldiers. In June, 1862, rooms were fitted up in the two buildings on Cuthbert Street in the rear of the college, by the management of the college aided by a Ladies' Association. A medical corps was appointed of fourteen physicians, seven surgeons, and a medical steward and the use of the hospital offered to the Government. This offer was refused. Only discharged soldiers were treated, about fifty in number. The hospital was not long kept open. From 1865 to 1866 the subject of a hospital was often discussed by the faculty of the college. In 1866 it was decided that the hospital be kept open and that the matron be allowed to receive students to board, the faculty placing in it such students as seemed proper. Later, in 1866, it was rented for a students' boarding house. In October, 1866, meetings were held to devise plans for a hospital. The division of the college occurring in 1867 nothing seems to have been done to establish a hospital until 1869, after the union of the colleges. In April, 1869, the hospital project was again discussed; preparations were made during the summer and fall. The Ladies' Homœopathic Hospital Fair Association was organized; friends in neighboring towns became interested and, in November, 1869, a great fair was held in Horticultural Hall, opening on November 17 and closing on November 30. From this fair the sum of $17,000 was realized. It was the wish of many that this money be made the nucleus of a larger sum to be used in the erection of a large and complete institution to cost $100,000. But it was decided by the college authorities to invest the funds in the purchase of the college property and to build a hospital on the ground located on Cuthbert Street. Although this met with opposition from many who were instrumental in raising the money, yet it was done and the hospital formally opened for patients on January 9, 1871. But although a hospital in connection with the college was now in operation, it was thought by many of the profession that Philadelphia should have a large general homœopathic hospital independent of the college. It was advised by a committee on the subject that the college authorities turn over the grounds and buildings to a Board of Trustees to be elected by the whole profession of Philadelphia, with the understanding that the new hospital building should be so constructed as to give the college clinical facilities. A charter was procured March 5, 1874, for the Homœopathic Hospital of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia. There was opposition by the college authorities, but a compromise was afterwards made and the real estate held by the college was transferred to the hospital trustees. The relations between the trustees of the college and the trustees of the hospital were, from 1874 to 1877, rather strained. In 1877 a great mass meeting was held and a committee appointed to report upon a plan for a hospital to represent the whole profession. In the next few years various fairs were held and the Legislature petitioned. On May 1, 1883, there occurred a complete severance between the college and hospital authorities. The college took the college charter, the college property, the museum, library and fixtures; the hospital authorities took the hospital property and the building. The newly elected college trustees appointed a committee to secure a lot for a new college and hospital buildings. This was procured on North Broad Street, as has been previously stated. At this time the old hospital was closed, but its expenses being insured by the faculty, was reopened. In 1885 it was decided again to merge the hospital with the college. This merger was completed by a new charter and the new institution was consolidated under the present name: The Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital of Philadelphia. The old hospital property was sold and became a nucleus for the new hospital endowment. In 1886 the Pennsylvania Homœopathic Hospital for Children, located in West Philadelphia, was merged into the Hahnemann Hospital. It is to be remembered that the new college was built before the hospital, and that the initial session was held in 1886-87. Some time in 1885 ground was broken for a hospital building in the rear of the college. This is the building now used as a dispensary and known as Clinical Hall. It is situated on a line with and in rear of the college. It is built of brick, finished like the college, and is of three stories, with a very handsomely appointed clinical and surgical amphitheatre extending through two stories at the upper part of the building, having a seating capacity of four hundred. The first of the hospital building was opened on October 3, 1887. It contained five wards and twenty-five beds, soon increased to thirty. Soon after the college removed from Filbert Street, the old Cuthbert Street Hospital was closed. One important factor in the organization and advancement of the new hospital project was the Women's Hospital Association of the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia. This was organized January 26, 1886, and through its efforts, fairs, receptions, teas, garden parties and a great international carnival were held. Legislative appropriations were also secured. In the meantime the new hospital was crowded for room and work was being rapidly advanced upon the main hospital buildings.

As soon as this completed hospital was formally opened, October 21, 1890, the dispensary, which had previously been in the basement of the college, was removed to the building, formerly used as a hospital, intended for dispensary purposes.

The hospital has been benefited by many handsome donations; from 1890 to 1918 there have been 52 beds endowed.

The hospital, at present (1918), contains twenty-five wards with a capacity for 250 beds, besides fifty-two rooms and three wards for the treatment of private patients.

All of the clinical work is conducted in one of the hospital buildings known as Clinical Hall, located directly in the rear of the college, each floor connecting by corridors with the general hospital.

On the same day the hospital was opened a nurse school was organized and this has been in active operation ever since. The acceptable ages for admission are from 21 to 35 years. Applicants are received at any time, must be of good moral character, and of sound health. During the month of probation, there are examinations in reading, penmanship, simple arithmetic and English dictation. If satisfactory, at the end of the probation, the applicant will be accepted as a pupil nurse and must sign an agreement to remain two years and obey the rules of the hospital and school. She must reside in the hospital and serve for the first year as assistant nurse in the wards. The second she must perform any duty either outside or inside to which she may be assigned. The period of study was extended to three years soon after the school was organized. Student nurses also receive from $5 to $10 monthly for incidental personal expenses. From 1890 to 1918 there have been 358 nurses graduated. There is also a nurse directory with a registration of trained nurses.

For some years after the opening of the hospital the need of maternity wards was felt. Although unable to obtain State aid, in 1897 a large four story house at 1713 Vine Street was rented with accommodations for twenty patients. It was opened in January, 1898.

From, and even before, 1898, the hospital had need of more room. With the rooms given up to the nurse pupils, private patients often could not be accommodated; the maternity house on Vine Street was also inadequate. In 1901, through a generous donation of land it became possible to erect three large buildings on the north of the hospital, on Fifteenth Street., extending through towards Broad Street. The first building is the Nurses' Home; the second is the Women's Building, or Maternity Hospital, and the third is the Power House.

The Nurses' Home was the first building formally opened and dedicated and this occurred on April 24, 1906. This building is devoted to the nurse students and the resident nurses and contains, usually, from forty to sixty nurses.

The Women's Building (the Maternity) was opened in 1908. The Power House was put into operation in the spring of 1907. This gave much additional room in the dispensary building, where the engines and fire appliances had formerly been located. The hospital has now a complete steam heating apparatus, electric lighting, a refrigerating plant, making the ice used in the hospital, and it is supplied with the most complete hygienic and sanitary appliances. This electric and heating plant also supplies the college building.

THE DISPENSARY.

The dispensary was opened with the college. It was called the Dispensary of the Homœopathic Medical College of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia. Eighteen of the homœopathic physicians of Philadelphia were appointed to serve consecutively. In 1851 a salary was given to the dispensary physician. The dispensary was located in the basement of the college on Filbert Street, and students were allowed to prescribe. In 1877, for a time, it was located on the third floor of the college. In 1886, when the college removed to its new home on Broad Street, the dispensary was located at first in the basement of the college, the entrance being from the side door on the south, under the college steps. Here it remained until the new hospital was opened in 1890, when it was removed to its present building, the first building erected after the college, and the one first used as a hospital. This building is connected with the hospital. A very interesting chapter in the history of the dispensary is the account of the branch established at Johnstown, Pa., after the great flood in that place in 1889. This was of great usefulness in furnishing relief to the suffering people. It was continued from June until December, 1889.

The patient who ascends the steps of Clinical Hall in search of relief first passes into a hall which is filled with wooden benches, and waits his turn to approach the windows of the executive officers, who examine him and give a card assigning him to one of the ten departments into which the dispensary is divided. These apartments are placed on either side of the corridor further along, and in the basement. The room of the pharmacist is on the same floor in a corner room fitted as a complete pharmacy and here the patient gets his medicine. Since the Power House was opened the basement of the dispensary is entirely devoted to patients. The departments are each governed by a chief and each has several assistants. All of these are physicians.

The college has an alumni association. Several associations were formed from 1857 to 1871, but not until 1884 was a permanent organization formed. This is still in active operation, has its meetings at the time of commencement. There is also a students' society called The Hahnemannian Institute, which meets regularly during the sessions, and confers a diploma.
